The skills that English majors learn—how to think, read, write, listen, and speak effectively—enable graduates to live successfully and contribute to society in all personal and professional endeavors. Those are the same skills that many employers, including those in high-tech firms, are looking for. In fact, there is “a growing desire among employers for hires with strong communication skills,” which has caused “employment and starting salaries [to] rise sharply for humanities grads.”* In addition, English majors often outperform the average scores on the GRE, GMAT, and LSAT, making the degree a preferred option for students seeking graduate and professional studies. Taking all of this into account, many savvy students select English as their primary or second major to broaden their post-graduation options.

APU’s Department of English introduces students to significant works of the literary imagination, guides their development in language and composition, and encourages them to read attentively, reflect deeply, write cogently, and express themselves creatively, all to glorify God and serve others. English faculty are well published in both critical and creative works across a variety of genres, and welcome undergraduates to work with them to publish their own creative work. The department also boasts an M.A. in English, which gives undergraduates a unique option to complete graduate classes during the senior year, and then continue on for a fifth year to earn a Master’s degree in English.

CHERYL PEEVYHOUSE ’04
Writer

Cheryl taught English for eight years before writing her debut science fiction novel, Where Futures End, published by Penguin in February 2016. Aside from being a writer, Cheryl also works part time for Help One Child, a non-profit which supports foster youth.

“My English professors at APU encouraged me to work toward publication, to believe in my efforts, and to challenge myself to improve.”

EMELI WARREN ’12
Assistant Editor
Disney Worldwide Publishing

Emeli took advantage of the different opportunities APU offered: she studied abroad in Italy, was President of Sigma Tau Delta, helped organize the first Poetry Slam, was copyeditor for Collide, and much more. She says these all contributed to the success of her career, including receiving her Master’s Degree.

“Through these experiences, I not only rounded out my resume with experience that related to my field, but I really got in the trenches of what it was like to do hands-on editing.”
