

THE PATHWAY FROM EDUCATION TO VOCATION

Becoming a Difference Maker in ENGLISH

Why Study English at Azusa Pacific University?

The skills that English majors learn—how to think, read, write, listen, and speak effectively—enable graduates to live successfully and contribute to society in all personal and professional endeavors. Those are the same skills that many employers, including those in high-tech firms, are looking for. In fact, there is “a growing desire among employers for hires with strong communication skills,” which has caused “employment and starting salaries [to] rise sharply for humanities grads.”* In addition, English majors often outperform the average scores on the GRE, GMAT, and LSAT, making the degree a preferred option for students seeking graduate and professional studies. Taking all of this into account, many savvy students select English as their primary or second major to broaden their post-graduation options.

APU’s Department of English introduces students to significant works of the literary imagination, guides their development in language and composition, and encourages them to read attentively, reflect deeply, write cogently, and express themselves creatively, all to glorify God and serve others. English faculty are well published in both critical and creative works across a variety of genres, and welcome undergraduates to work with them to publish their own creative work. The department also boasts an M.A. in English, which gives undergraduates a unique option to complete graduate classes during the senior year, and then continue on for a fifth year to earn a Master’s degree in English.
