Why Study International Relations at Azusa Pacific University?

A subfield of Political Science, International Relations comprises the study of the several levels of political interaction between nations—from national security and military power, to diplomatic negotiations and treaty-making, to economic negotiations about international trade and commerce.

The major in International Relations at Azusa Pacific University prepares students for a variety of careers in the public and private sector relating to these government to government negotiations. These include vocations in the federal government focusing on foreign policy formulation or analysis, aid programs, development and cultural exchange, as well as careers dedicated to national security problems, including counterterrorism and cybersecurity. In the private sector, some students find the major useful as they prepare for careers in international business and commerce, while others have used the major as preparation for non-profit development enterprises in agriculture and food production, or toward improving delivery of health services and clean water. Still others devote their time and energy to stopping human rights abuses including human trafficking.

An International Relations major can prepare a student for a career in one of over a dozen federal agencies, or it can be an important part of a student's preparation for a career in private industry or business, broadening one's horizons and deepening one's understanding of how nations and economies depend on each other.
YOU MIGHT CONSIDER AN INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS MAJOR IF YOU:

- Follow current international events and consider their global effects
- Seek to understand different cultures and compare various forms of government
- Enjoy learning foreign languages and interacting with people from other cultures and nations
- Plan, organize, and prioritize your work
- Work well with others and perform well under pressure
- Set and formulate goals and objectives
- Enjoy research on international political problems, and local or state issues as they relate to other nations or international organizations.
- Appreciate clear, cogent argument and persuasive rhetoric
- Think critically, rationally, and creatively
- Possess and develop strong research skills
- Continue to develop your strong writing and verbal communication skills
